Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a holding device for attaching an article in an adjustable position on the body of an automotive vehicle, for the purpose of protecting the article from the exterior environment. More particularly, the present invention relates to a holding device for attaching an article such as an air bag to an interior trim material which is mounted to a vehicle body panel, and for securing the article in an adjustable position adjacent to the trim material, and which includes a plurality of fasteners for attaching the device to the trim material. 2. Description of the Prior Art It is known to provide automotive vehicles with interior trim materials which are mounted to a vehicle body panel, such as the interior side wall of the door or the roof panel, for the purpose of providing a decorative effect, improving interior aesthetics, providing protection for the vehicle occupants from certain elements of the exterior environment, and/or providing protection for the vehicle occupants from impacts against the side of the door. Such interior trim materials are typically fabricated of a plastic material and are injection molded, and the injection molded trim materials are adhered to the body panel by adhesive, for example. It is also known to provide various automotive air bags and safety systems which are mounted to the interior trim material. In some known automotive vehicles, it is also known to provide an integral foam layer or barrier, typically formed of a urethane foam, which is injection molded into the interior trim material prior to the injection molding of the trim material and which is positioned between the interior trim material and the vehicle body panel. The foam layer may be covered by an outer decorative trim material to give the trim material an improved appearance, and the trim material may also have an adhesive material provided thereon for bonding the trim material to the body panel, for example. It is also known to mount air bags and f678ea9f9e
